

THE BIGGER

WEEKLY 11 JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 11TH (VOLUME TWO) 30 CENTS

WOMEN DRINK OUT THE BACK

Sydney women protest, tired of being shoved into back bars and shipped off for the privilege of being out of control of "men's talk", organize to break that traditional male stronghold, the public bar. In many parts they expect — and get — kicks, stones and broken glass. In between, advice they receive is to be tough, and argue their case with lawyers, judges and police. The confrontation, not without laughter, produces four books and a fine view among the beleaguered sexes.

Why hospitals should kill people too

"The cabbage patch", hospital staff call intensive care wards. A male nurse talks to Colin Tait about heart victims and comatose, the machines and methods our institutions use to prolong the lives of what were once people. Death could be easier. Page 8

Pituri: Australia's oldest stone

A botanist's journey into the strongest use of a drug that alleviated not only the hardships of early life but the wear of disillusioned white explorers and early settlers.

Nimbin townsfolk hand over to festival

Local townsfolk resist the intrusion of the urban counter-culture's hot paths into their rural peace — but Australia Festival organizers, if they're in luck and crime rates in town, gladly welcome country towns to the stage only to be told to come back to the land. Joyfully Garner Page 5

We hired a special jet for the gold records

By Bruce Davis

When the music of the 1970s was at its peak, it was also the time when the gold record was at its peak. It was a time when the music industry was at its peak, and the gold record was the most coveted of awards. The gold record was a symbol of success, and it was a time when the music industry was at its peak.
